PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT.

To the Honorable Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioner respectfully shows:

JURISDICTION.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, a review of which is here sought, was entered on March 22, 1948 (R. 396).

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code, as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925 (28 U. S. C. A., Section 347(a)).

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF THE MATTER INVOLVED.

This case involves the question whether the partnership under the facts shown in the record and composed of petitioner, his wife and his mother was valid under the Federal income tax laws. The facts as found by the Tax Court are as follows (R. 375-380):

> "Walter G. Hougland, Jr. (hereinafter referred to as 'petitioner'), is the son of Walter G. Hougland and McGhee Hougland, the petitioner in Docket Nos. 4565 and 4998. Petitioner is a young man 29 years of age, residing and having his place of business at Owensboro, Kentucky. Petitioner's father, W. G. Hougland, died testate on November 7, 1939. The income tax returns of petitioner and of the estate of W. G. Hougland for the taxable period were filed with the collector of internal revenue for the district of Kentucky. When petitioner was about 15 years of age he began working for his father who, at the time of his death, had been engaged in the river transportation business for approximately 50 years. Petitioner and his wife, Dorothy Nell Hougland, were married June 15, 1933. To this union three children were born. Petitioner and his wife were divorced on or about January 20, 1944.
> "In the early part of 1937, petitioner unsuccessfully attempted to induce his father to buy an additional towboat, whereupon he prevailed upon his father to assist him in acquiring such a boat. A contract was made with the Nashville Bridge Company for the construction of a towboat at a cost of approximately $158,000. The boat was named for his wife the 'Dorothy H.' Petitioner at the time had no resources of his own. His father loaned him $30,000 in cash to make the initial payment on the boat. Petitioner executed and delivered to his father three promissory notes in the amounts of $12,000, $10,000 and $8,000, respectively. Upon the completion of the boat, petitioner, with his father as a co-maker, executed notes for the balance of the cost. In April, 1938, the boat was put in commission, hauling gasoline for the Gulf Oil Company and the Gulf Refining Company, and has been exclusively in that employment ever since. The acquisition cost of the 'Dorothy H.' was paid off in full sometime in 1940 from earnings of the boat. Petitioner, upon starting operations, opened and carried on a bank account in the name of 'Towboat Dorothy H.', although the business was conducted under the name 'Hougland's'. Sometime the latter part of 1938 or the forepart of 1939, petitioner's father suggested to him that he would like petitioner's mother to have an interest in the boat and its business. On August 7, 1939, at petitioner's direction, his attorneys prepared a 'Bill of Sale' which was executed by petitioner purporting to transfer to his mother a one-half interest in the boat and its business at a price calculated to represent one-half of the cost of the boat less depreciation to the date of the sale. Both before and after the sale, petitioner's mother answered some telephone calls and telegrams since the business was operated from her home. The mother had no funds of her own and it was understood that she was to execute her note for the purchase price, assume joint liability on the three notes aggregating $30,000, given by petitioner to his father, and two other notes in the respective amounts of $5,000 and $3,871.59, which were payable at the American National Bank of Nashville. It was also understood that the mother's obligation would be discharged out of her share of the earnings of the business. Thereupon petitioner's mother executed her note to him in the amount of $54,069.27, due one year from date with six per cent interest. At the time of the sale it was the understanding of the parties that petitioner was to manage the business, and that until the debts were paid there should be no salaries and that the drawings of the partners should be kept at a minimum. No written partnership agreement was entered into. From August 7, 1939, to the end of that calendar year petitioner and his mother each reported one-half of the net income of the business for tax purposes.

"Shortly after petitioner married, his wife, Dorothy, commenced work in his father's business as a bookkeeper. She had had no practical experience or training and her bookkeeping was of the crudest sort and not in accordance with good accounting practice. After petitioner started his operations with the towboat 'Dorothy H.', petitioner's wife also looked after his bookkeeping. For her services as bookkeeper she received a salary, the amount of which was divided between the two businesses.

"On January 1, 1940, petitioner and his mother executed a 'Bill of Sale' transferring to petitioner's wife a one-third interest in 'Hougland's', and its assets, which at the time consisted of the 'Dorothy H.' and a small tender, at a price equivalent to one-third of the depreciated cost of that equipment. Dorothy had no funds of her own with which to pay the purchase price of such third interest, and it was understood that she should pay for the same out of her part of the earnings of the business. Dorothy thereupon executed to petitioner and his mother her note for $39,131.66, due one year after date with six per cent interest, representing one-third of that portion of the depreciated cost of the equipment which had been fully paid. She also assumed joint liability with petitioner and his mother for the notes representing that part of the cost of the equipment then unpaid. At the time this transaction occurred it was understood that no salaries would be paid; that personal drawings would be held to a minimum; and that petitioner would continue to manage the business. Prior to that time Dorothy prepared the checks which were signed by petitioner; but afterwards she was authorized to, and did, sign 90 per cent of the checks. Sometime in 1940 she ceased keeping books for 'Hougland's' and for the Estate of Walter G. Hougland. For the calendar year 1940, petitioner, his mother and his wife, Dorothy, each reported and paid income taxes on one-third the net income of 'Hougland's'.

"Sometime in 1940 a contract was made with the Nashville Bridge Company for the construction of another towboat to be known as the 'Walter G'. A substantial cash payment was made out of the earnings of 'Hougland's'. When this boat was completed, petitioner, his mother, and Dorothy executed their joint note to the Nashville Bridge Company for $125,000, payable in monthly installments of $5,000 each, and a note for $4,502.28, the aggregate of these two notes representing the unpaid part of the cost of the boat. These notes were paid off out of 'Hougland's' earnings by August 3, 1943. Up to that date, except for relatively small personal drawings, substantially all the net income of 'Hougland's' was applied to the payment of the notes executed for equipment, and to the payment of the income taxes of the three individuals. Neither petitioner's wife nor mother had income from 'Hougland's' to apply upon their individual notes executed by them for the acquisition of their respective interests. In 1939 and until they were divorced in 1944, petitioner and his wife resided in his mother's home and the household expenses were paid out of funds withdrawn from 'Hougland's' on the agreed basis of two-thirds for petitioner and one-third for his mother. The office of 'Hougland's' was at the home of petitioner.

"Petitioner's father died on November 7, 1939. Under his will, petitioner received 2/5ths, his mother 1/5th, and James Hougland, a son by the first marriage, 2/5ths of the entire estate, including his river craft and business. The river transportation business of the decedent was conducted by his estate until the estate was finally settled on October 3, 1940. Upon the final settlement of the estate, the business was conducted by a partnership under the name of 'Walter G. Hougland Sons' under the management of the petitioner. The partners were petitioner, his mother, and James Hougland, a son of Walter G. Hougland by a prior marriage. Each had the same interest in that partnership as they had received under the will. James Hougland died in 1940 and his 2/5ths interest was divided between his widow and their two children, each taking a two-fifteenths interest in the partnership.

"On January 1, 1941, petitioner, with the consent of his other partners, transferred to his wife, Dorothy, one-half of his two-fifths interest in the partnership and assets of 'Walter G. Hougland Sons' for $42,325.25. Dorothy executed and delivered her demand note for $42,325.25, with the understanding that the note was to be paid off out of her interest in the earnings of the partnership. As of February 12, 1945, all of that note except $8,500 had been so paid. The bona fides of this latter partnership is not in issue.

"In 1943 marital dissension developed between petitioner and his wife, Dorothy, and they concluded to, and did, separate. An agreement in settlement of the wife's property rights was executed on December 15, 1943. The agreement contemplated a divorce, and the parties shortly thereafter were divorced and the custody of their three minor children was awarded to the wife. In the property settlement it was finally agreed that petitioner would pay the $150,000 demanded by Dorothy, with the proviso that Dorothy would make provision for the children by placing her interest in 'Hougland's' and 'Walter G. Hougland Sons' in trust for that purpose. Dorothy consented on condition that she be personally released from all obligations she had incurred in acquiring her interest in the two aforementioned businesses, and her liability transferred to the trust estate. Petitioner and his mother, at the same time, executed and delivered to Dorothy separate instruments releasing her from all personal liability in respect of the obligations she had assumed in connection with the acquisition of such businesses. It was the purpose of both attorneys representing the respective parties, in preparing the trust instrument, to protect, as far as reasonably could be done, the interests of the three infant children. It was for this reason that the trust instrument provided that the interest in the businesses constituting the trust fund could not be sold without the consent of the petitioner, if living; that the reinvestment of the proceeds of any such sale must be with his approval, and that the income of the trust could not be borrowed against for the purpose of acquiring a residence for Dorothy and the children without his written consent. Dorothy was named as trustee of the trust and, on account of her youth and lack of business experience, the attorneys felt that the foregoing provisions would tend to safeguard the integrity of the trust funds. The trust instrument provided that in the event of the death of Dorothy, petitioner, if living should nominate her successor. This provision was not inserted in response to any claim of right on the part of petitioner, but because the attorneys considered that, as father of the children, he would be the proper person to name such successor. The trust was to terminate on the date the youngest of the three children became 21 years of age or, if he should die before reaching that age, then on the date the youngest living child should become that age. In the event all three children should die before reaching the age of 21, the trust was to terminate and the trust property was to vest in the petitioner, if living, or if dead, in his heirs.

"The partnership return filed under the name 'Hougland's' for the year 1940 disclosed a net income of $94,834.62, allocated equally among petitioner, his mother and his wife. These three individuals, in each of their separate income tax returns, reported the receipt of $31,611.54. Their returns disclosed income tax liabilities as follows: petitioner, $8,158.92; his mother, $8,096.58; and his wife, $6,872.15. These amounts were paid by 'Hougland's' during the year 1941, in four equal installments on or about the respective due dates and were charged to the accounts of those individuals. The respondent included all the income of 'Hougland's for the year 1940 in petitioner's taxable income, under section 22 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, on the ground that 'Hougland's' was not a bona fide partnership for income tax purposes."

The above-quoted findings of fact were made upon the uncontradicted testimony and cover every fact proven by petitioner, except two. On these two, the proof also was uncontradicted. One was that the earnings of the partnership business were in large part due to the equipment in which Dorothy Nell Hougland and petitioner's mother each had a one-third interest, rather than to the personal efforts of petitioner (R. 184). The other was that the provision in the trust deed, referred to in the next to the last paragraph of the Court's finding, to the effect that in the event the three children should die without issue the trust property should pass to petitioner or to his heirs, was inserted in the trust instrument without the knowledge of petitioner and through no demand on his part that the trust instrument should contain any such provision. Both petitioner and his counsel, Honorable Wilbur F. Miller, now Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, testified to that fact and their testimony was not contradicted (R. 196, 237).

On the above facts, the Tax Court of the United States sustained the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who determined that the wife and mother of petitioner were not bona-fide partners in "Hougland's", but that the business was, in fact, that of petitioner and that the entire net income thereof for the taxable year 1940 was includable in the taxable income of petitioner (R. 382). The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirmed this decision of the Tax Court on the ground that the facts found by the Tax Court were based upon substantial evidence and brought the case within the ambit of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280 (R. 396).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

1. Was the Circuit Court of Appeals in error in its conception that the cases of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, and Lusthaus v. Commissioner, 327 U. S. 293, mandatorily require the outlawing of all partnerships between a man and his wife, and between a man and his mother, where the woman involved makes no substantial contribution to the partnership in the way of services and where her capital contribution originates with the man?

2. Was the Circuit Court of Appeals in error in holding that the ruling of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, was applicable to a partnership between a son and his mother?

3. Was the Circuit Court of Appeals in error in holding that the rule of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, was applicable to the interest of Dorothy Nell Hougland which she acquired from her mother-in-law, McGhee Hougland, and not from the petitioner?

REASONS RELIED ON FOR ALLOWANCE OF WRIT.

1. The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals to the effect that a partnership between a man, his wife and his mother, in which the wife and mother make no substantial contribution to the partnership in the way of services, and in which the property contributed by them was received from the man, must, as a matter of law, be disregarded for Federal income tax purposes, was based upon a misconception of the decision of this Court in Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, and resulted in a decision of a Federal question in a way probably in conflict with that case.

2. The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, holding that the ruling of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, was applicable to a partnership between a son and his mother, rendered a decision on an important question of Federal law which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court.

3. The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, holding that the rule of Commissioner v. Tower, 327

U. S. 280, is applicable, even though the wife's interest was not received by her from her husband, rendered a decision in conflict with the decision of another Circuit Court of Appeals on the same matter (Durwood v. Commissioner, 159 Fed. 2d 400 (8th C. C. A.); and see, also, Alexander v. Commissioner, 6 T. C. 804, and Shulak v. Commissioner, 6 T. C. 1260).

PRAYER FOR WRIT.

WHEREFORE, your petitioner respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue out of and under the seal of this Honorable Court directed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, commanding said Court to certify and send to this Court for its review and determination a full and complete transcript of the record and all proceedings by the said Court had in this case, numbered and entitled on its docket, No. 10442, Walter G. Hougland, Jr., v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to the end that this cause may be reviewed and determined by this Court, and for such other and further relief as to this Court may seem proper.

III.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

The summary Statement of the Matter Involved in the petition for writ of certiorari is hereby adopted.

IV.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.

(1) The Circuit Court of Appeals was in error in its conception that the cases of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280 and Lusthaus v. Commissioner, 327 U. S. 293, mandatorily require the outlawing of all partnerships between a man and his wife, and between a man and his mother, where the woman involved makes no substantial contribution to the partnership in the way of services and where her capital contribution originates with the man.

(2) The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the ruling of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, was applicable to a partnership between a son and his mother.

(3) The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the rule of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, was applicable to the interest of Dorothy Nell Hougland which she acquired from her mother-in-law, McGhee Hougland, and not from the petitioner.

V.

ARGUMENT.

(1) The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, to the Effect That a Partnership Between a Man, His Wife and His Mother, in Which the Wife and Mother Make No Substantial Contribution to the Partnership in the Way of Services, and in Which the Property Contributed by Them Was Received From the Man, Must, as a Matter of Law, Be Disregarded For Federal Income Tax Purposes, Was Based Upon a Misconception of the Decision of This Court in Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, and Resulted in a Decision of a Federal Question in a Way Probably in Conflict With That Case.

Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, holds that, if a wife makes a substantial contribution to the earnings of the income of a partnership by the rendition of services or through capital not originating with her husband, which she puts in the business, then, as a matter of law, there is a legal partnership for income tax purposes. It does not hold that, if the capital contributed by the wife originated with her husband, that fact of itself outlaws the partnership for income tax purposes. This Court merely stated that the Tax Court may take into consideration the fact that a wife renders no service to the partnership, or the fact that the capital contributed by her originated with her husband, or a combination of these facts in determining whether the partnership is real within the meaning of the revenue laws. The opinion in the Tower case was primarily rested upon the proposition that the facts found by the Tax Court were sufficient to support its findings that the wife was not a partner in the business.

The Tower case would not be authority for holding that, if a husband owns an income-producing office building, which he has managed, and irrevocably conveys by a deed a one-half interest therein to his wife, but the husband continues to manage the building, such part of the income from the building attributable to the wife's one-half interest should be taxed to the husband. Likewise, if a husband owned all of the stock of a corporation, which he has managed and controlled, and irrevocably transfers and assigns to his wife a portion of that stock, the Tower case would not be authority for holding that the dividends thereafter paid on the stock transferred to the wife should be taxed as income of the husband. Further, if a husband owned a towboat, which he had leased to others under a charter party and made an irrevocable transfer of a one-half interest in that boat to his wife, the income attributable to that one-half interest would not be taxed to the husband. The only difference between this and the case presented by this petition is that, instead of the boat being leased to others, it was operated by the joint owners. The test is not where the property contributed by the partner came from, but whether or not the contributed property was in truth and fact unconditionally owned by the person purporting to contribute it. In this case there was no evidence that would even support an inference that the transfers from the petitioner were not absolute. So far as the wife is concerned, this is demonstrated beyond all reasonable doubt by the treatment of the partnership property when she divorced the petitioner. Also, the uncontradicted testimony established that the earnings of the partnership business were in large part due to the equipment in which petitioner's wife and mother each had a one-third interest, rather than to the personal efforts of petitioner (R. 148).

(2) The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals That the Ruling of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, Was Applicable to a Partnership Between a Son and His Mother Rendered a Decision on an Important Question of Federal Law Which Has Not Been, But Should be, Settled by This Court.

Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, and Lusthaus v. Commissioner, 327 U. S. 293, dealt strictly with a husband and wife partnership. Aside from the general rule laid down in the Tower case for determining whether a partnership is valid or invalid for income tax purposes, those cases have no application to the partnership created in August, 1939, between petitioner and his mother, McGhee Hougland, through the sale by petitioner to her of a one-half interest in the boat and its business. This Court has never held whether or not the mere fact that a parent contributed no substantial service to a partnership with a child and that the property contribution made by the parent to the partnership originated with the child outlaws such a partnership for income tax purposes. In Singletary v. Commissioner, 155 Fed. 2d 207 (C. C. A. 5), the partnership there involved was not condemned because the property contributed by the parents originated with the child; it was condemned because the Circuit Court of Appeals found that there was substantial evidence supporting the finding of the Tax Court that there was no good faith partnership.

(3) The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, Holding That the Rule of Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, Is Applicable Even Though the Wife's Interest Was Not Received by Her From Her Husband, Rendered a Decision in Conflict With the Decision of Another Circuit Court of Appeals on the Same Matter.

Dorothy Nell Hougland did not acquire her one-third interest in the partnership entirely from petitioner. At the time she acquired her one-third interest, petitioner and his mother, McGhee Hougland, each owned a one-half interest. They jointly sold a one-third interest in the boat and its business to Dorothy Nell Hougland. In effect, each of them sold a one-sixth interest to Dorothy Nell Hougland. If the Tower and Lusthaus cases go to the limit claimed by the Commissioner, that is, if those cases decide that, if the wife's interest originates with her husband, the partnership is not valid, those cases still have no application to that one-sixth interest which Dorothy Nell Hougland acquired from McGhee Hougland. That interest did not come from her husband. In Durwood v. Commissioner, 159 Fed. 2d 400 (C. C. A. 8), the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit reversed the Tax Court and held that, where the great bulk of the shares of petitioner's wife, son and daughter did not come from petitioner, but from his brothers, the facts were not within the Tower case and that the income on those shares could not properly be taxed to the petitioner. To the same effect are Alexander v. Commissioner, 6 T. C. 804, and Shulak v. Commissioner, 6 T. C. 1260.
